An extremely premature infant, monozygotic twin, one of two offspring was acutely referred for respiratory distress and episodes of cyanosis soon after birth. During delivery, neonatal resuscitation and subsequent assessment revealed failure to pass nasogastric catheter through the left nostril and difficulty passing through the right nostril. The endoscopic evaluation of the nasal passage is shown above (Panel).

What is the diagnosis?

Answer: refer to page 352