A 28-year-old Malay gentleman presented to the Otorhinolaryngology clinic for recurrent sore throat and fever occurring almost at fortnightly interval for the past year. He also had a post nasal drip, throat itchiness, early morning sneezing and recurrent foul smelling mucopurulent discharge from the right nostril since childhood that got worst when he had pharyngitis. The symptoms were occasionally associated with nasal block and snoring. There was no anosmia, sleep apnoea or day time somnolence. Routine nasal endoscopy was performed as part of the examination (Panel).
